ANNOUNCER

Dear saints of Ascension,

The 19th-century philosopher Karl Marx famously wrote that religion “is the opium of the people. The abolition of religion as the illusory happiness of the people is a demand for their true happiness” (Critique of Hegel’s Philosophy of Right, 1843). In other words, religion is a farce. It cannot lead to true happiness. It might yield the short-term benefit of strengthening the weak-minded to carry on, but it is ultimately man’s mistaken invention. Marxism is godless in all aspects. It means to replace God and His created order with the state and its order. And because Marxism is godless, it never accounts for the Scriptural truth of original sin; hence, the horrific atrocities that follow in the wake of Marxist revolution. Even Marx’s contemporary, Mikhail Bakunin—an avowed anarchist—recognized that a “dictatorship of the proletariat” was too idealistic... inevitably, one would see a “dictatorship over the proletariat” by a one-party totalitarian regime.

There is a growing affinity for Marxist principles in America. Much of that emerges from within higher academia. Even public grade schools are relying on Howard Zinn’s bad faith text, A People’s History of the United States, which paints every American event through the binary lens of Marx’s favorite dichotomy: oppressor versus oppressed. Whether one finds Marxism appealing because he has rejected God or has rejected God because he finds Marxism appealing is superfluous, because the philosophy is at its core atheistic. The void left by rejecting God cannot remain empty—it must be filled, and so the Marxist fills it with the state that is supposed to usher in utopia for the masses.

Godlessness is reason enough to reject Marxism outright. Yet in society, Christians can live among the godless, as long as the godless tolerate Christianity. But another tenet of Marxism will not allow society to exist at all, neither for the Christian nor the non-Christian: as Marx and his colleague Friedrich Engels write, they seek the “Abolition of the family!” (Communist Manifesto, 1848). In fact, the duo’s final work, The Origin of the Family (1884), pushes for the abolition of inheritance, private education, and monogamy. In synopsis, they write, “With the transfer of the means of production into common ownership, the single family ceases to be the economic unit of society. Private housekeeping is transformed into a social industry. The care and education of the children becomes a public affair; society looks after all children alike, whether they are legitimate or not.” It’s not difficult to deduce how they arrived at this insane fantasy: if religion is a farce, the Bible is nonsense; if the Bible is nonsense, God's created order is rubbish; if God's created order is rubbish, we must invent our own, better order.

Although these principles sound absurd, the 20th century testifies to their willing acceptance and gruesome result: hundreds of millions dead, as the likes of Joseph Stalin, Mao Zedong, and Pol Pot attempted their Marxist utopias. Unnervingly, 21st-century America has many influential proponents of communist ideals. Harvard University recently held a "homeschool conference," co-organized by a professor who declared, "the state needs to be the ultimate guarantor of a child's well-being. There's just no alternative to that. ...The reason parent-child relationships exist is because the state confers legal parenthood.... It's the state that is empowering parents to do anything with children—to take them home, to have custody, and to make any kind of decisions about that"

(https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=94iXbu7a\_HM). To suggest the state determines the parent-child relationship or is the ultimate provider for children is an entirely unscriptural, satanic notion, which exalts the state as god and savior. The provision of children is a parent's obligation, not the state's; and the parent-child relationship exists under the created order of God, not because of manmade legislation! When people espouse an end to the traditional family, beware—I cannot stress this enough.

The great Christian apologist G. K. Chesterton writes, "The family may fairly be considered, one would think, an ultimate human institution. Every one would admit that it has been the main cell and central unit of almost all societies hitherto, except, indeed, such societies as that of Lacedaemon [Sparta], which went in for 'efficiency,' and has, therefore, perished, and left not a trace behind" (Heretics, 1905). When God created Adam, He also created the church, for Adam worshiped God; when God created Eve, He also created family, for Adam and Eve were married in the command to procreate (Ge 2:18-25; 1:26-28). Forces are at work to destroy these fundamental truths. The first truth of the church, if destroyed, ends in one's eternal condemnation; the second truth of the family, if destroyed, doesn't necessarily end in one's eternal condemnation—but know that this is the greatest compulsory destruction! Evil men cannot forcibly destroy your faith that is immaterial, so they seek to reorder (forcibly destroy) the traditional family, which is God's first means of the gospel, for "Most certainly father and mother are apostles, bishops, and priests to their children, for it is they who make them acquainted with the gospel. In short, there is no greater or nobler authority on earth than that of parents over their children, for this authority is both spiritual and temporal" (Martin Luther, The Estate of Marriage; cf De 6:4-7; Eph 6:4).

As Christians we stridently oppose Marxism because we are for family and for the gospel. We hold a vested interest in our neighbors concerning both their temporal and eternal welfare. And so we declare (through song and conversation) the blessings of God made known through His Scripture: that He has given family as the basic order of society to provide for children and impart the gospel, and that He has given the gospel because of His great love for the world in Christ.

In His name,
Pastor Greg

Announcements

The Lutheran Women's group will meet on Saturday, July 18 @ 9:00am to watch the District Convention "virtually" with a lunch TBA (and with the church's COVID protocols in effect for everyone's safety). If you plan on joining us, please RSVP to Cindy Dougherty or Cherri Walker. Thanks!

Stewardship

God has work for each of us to do according to our vocations, and we are to use the resources – the gifts – we have from God according to our vocation. Examine yourself: giving of your first fruits – does your offering come out of your paycheck first, not just what's left over? Are you relying on God's promise to provide for you? Stepping out in faith will change your life! Faith does not make things easy, it makes them possible. We bring God glory by worshiping him, loving other believers, becoming like Christ, serving others with our gifts, and telling others about him. The Lord takes pleasure in his people. During a crisis, especially, I've heard we live in uncertain times, and it is true. But we also live in certain times, certain that a protective and loving God stands with us.

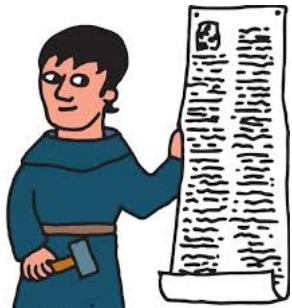

A quote from Martin Luther: "I have held many things in my hands and I have lost them all. But whatever I placed in Gods' hands, that I still possess." Please remember to mail your offerings when unable to attend worship services:

A LITTLE LUTHER

"In these matters, which concern the spoken, external Word, it must be firmly maintained that God gives no one his Spirit or grace apart from the external Word which goes before. We say this to protect ourselves from the enthusiasts, that is, the 'spirits,' who boast that they have the Spirit apart from and before contact with the Word. On this basis, they judge, interpret, and twist the Scripture or oral Word according to their pleasure. Müntzer did this, and there are still many doing this today, who set themselves up as shrewd judges between the spirit and the letter without knowing what they say or teach. The papacy is also purely religious raving in that the pope boasts that 'all laws are in the shrine of his heart' and that what he decides and commands in his churches is supposed to be Spirit and law—even when it is above or contrary to the Scriptures or the spoken Word. This is all the old devil and old snake, who also turned Adam and Eve into enthusiasts and led them from the external Word of God to 'spirituality' and their own presumption—although he even accomplished this by means of other, external words. ...In short: enthusiasm clings to Adam and his children from the beginning to the end of the world—fed and spread among them as poison by the old dragon. It is the source, power, and might of all the heresies, even that of the papacy and Mohammed. Therefore we should and must insist that God does not want to deal with us human beings, except by means of his external Word and sacrament. Everything that boasts of being from the Spirit apart from such a Word and sacrament is of the devil. For God even desired to appear to Moses first in the burning bush and by means of the spoken word; no prophet—not even Elijah or Elisha—received the Spirit outside of or without the Ten Commandments; John the Baptist was not conceived without Gabriel's preceding Word, nor did he leap in his mother's womb without Mary's voice; and St. Peter says: the prophets did not prophesy 'by human will' but 'by the Holy Spirit,' indeed, as 'holy people of God.' However, without the external Word, they were not holy—much less would the Holy Spirit have moved them to speak while they were still unholy. Peter says they were holy because the Holy Spirit speaks through them." (Smalcald Articles III.8.3-6, 9-13, 1537)

SCHOOL PREP HELP: Below is a list of things we could use help with ASAP before The Edison School begins the school year; please let me know if you're interested in volunteering. Also, Thrivent Action Teams are a great way to get some of these projects funded!

1. We still have some heavy items that need to be moved to the Fellowship Hall for the garage sale: desks and other furniture, which will require at least two strong people.
2. The classrooms are nearly done being painted by the school, and I think you'll be WOWED by the change. We can take the lead in painting the hallways. Will anyone volunteer? Let's take our time and do it right. The hallways don't necessarily need to be completed by the start of the school year. We need people to do wall patching, edging, and rolling.
3. We still have work to do on the courtyard decking by taking up the old wood and installing the new (the supplies are fully paid-for). We also need to consider "topping" the stairs down the outside hill with new wood for safe use.
6. We need to move (or remove) the sanctuary speaker from the old nursery to the vestibule area.
7. The basement closet full of church records needs to be cleaned out with the vital records to maintain re-located; if you have insight into what should stay or go, please help.
8. By the yard sale on July 11, we need to organize the sale items in the Fellowship Hall; ALSO: if there's anything you personally want from the yard sale items, please take them now! We could use the room with all that's going on, and who knows how much we'll sell... I'd rather an item find a home with one of you than be discarded. There's lots of bookshelves, filing cabinets, etc. to be had.

Thanks in advance for all your help! -Pastor Greg

Facts and Faith: What we know to be true in the face of a pandemic

A Faculty Opinion in the Tradition of Gutachten

WHEN THE COVID-19 PANDEMIC FINALLY COMES TO A HALT, as all things do, both church and state will likely look back at these times and acknowledge that some decisions made in an attempt to protect the physical health of those entrusted to their care were reasonable, while others were unreason-able. This is to be expected when fallible human beings approach the un-known.

Public officials strive to follow the best scientific and medical advice in establishing policy. We Christians ought to be thankful when they carry out their God-given vocation faithfully. At the same time, their decisions may be marred by either a lack or an excess of caution, distorted by political motives, or simply limited by inadequate advice and knowledge. And, of course, their scope embraces only this-worldly concerns. In our thoroughly secularised society, our leaders no longer value the work of the Church. Public worship, reception of the sacraments, and pastoral care are deemed non-essential, as leaders focus exclusively on protecting physical (and not spiritual) health.

The Church will therefore assess the evidence and gauge the needs of her people according to different criteria. Certainly, Christian pastors and churches must sift through the evidence diligently and wisely in order to decide how to apply public policy to their unique situation. In the process there is an ever-present danger of playing “armchair scientist”, questioning public policy and thereby trespassing on other people’s vocations (AC 28:13). But while respect is due to the experts, the task is made confoundingly difficult by a surplus of conflicting scientific and medical opinions, in which context the Christian theologian is merely an amateur.

Christians, however, are privy to a different kind of knowledge that applies to a different realm. Together with the physical, Christians are concerned about spiritual welfare; when the two come into irreconcilable conflict, Christians will choose the greater good (Lk. 10:42). Only the Word of Jesus can tell us what this is. For this reason, the Church must even be ready, when necessary, to “obey God rather than men” (Acts 5:29).

As theologians, the responsibility of this seminary faculty is to speak the Word of Christ that is needful for us to hear in this situation. Only His Word can tell us what is true beyond all doubt. What we know to be true is what Christ tells us. The seminary faculty have received numerous requests for guidance from LCC’s pastors and people. The following brief comments are offered as a response to the Church proceeding from this foundation.

A “New Normal”?

A sober historical perspective is not the exclusive possession of Christian theologians. But as the phrase “unprecedented situation” is repeated ad nauseam, those who know history are obliged to question it, recalling the count-less epidemics that have plagued the world since the time of the New Testament. Throughout each crisis the Church and her ministers have been present with the faithful people in their suffering, offering the succour of God’s healing Word and sacraments. What is “unprecedented” in this latest crisis is governments’ side-lining the Church’s ministry, locking her doors, and presuming to tell her that live-streaming services is an adequate substitute.

As our leaders look ahead to our emergence from this crisis, whether they envision a regular, seasonal return of a coronavirus pandemic or conquering the disease through an effective vaccine, they repeat a second slogan: we must be prepared for a “new normal”. To some extent this is a truism. In many small ways our daily lives will be changed irrevocably. Just as SARS led to the ubiquitous dispensers of hand sanitiser and 9/11 meant pocket knives would be confiscated at airport security, so COVID-19 will lead to permanent changes in practice and behaviour, like high water marks left behind when a flood recedes.

For crucial reasons, however, Christians must not accede to talk of a “new normal”. Yes, we can recall countless recoveries from war and pestilence, and we should remind our world that “this, too, shall pass”. But more importantly, we confess that Christ is the Lord of history, “the same yesterday and today and for ever” (Heb. 13:8). We know that the Father “who is above all and through all and in all” (Eph. 4:6) holds us in His hand and will not let us go (Jn 15:28f.). Clinging to His promises, we must be confident that we will return to the “normal” that He has graciously established and wills for us. We must not be tempted to think that the world can no longer accommodate the ways and deeds of historic, biblical Christianity, as if the gifts of Christ given out in the way He instituted are obsolete and have no place in the “new normal”.

This exhortation to return to the “old normal” will be applied concretely to the practice of the Lord’s Supper below. But the implications are broader. While vulnerable parishioners may choose to wear masks and will be conscientious about keeping their distance from other congregants, we must consider the message of fear and doubt conveyed if masks become an ongoing feature of public worship. In some jurisdictions authorities have forbidden singing (or even brass music) on the basis of dubious and disputed evidence that it might spread the virus more effectively than speaking. The devil is delighted when he can silence our praise. Here, too, the Christian must have confidence that what God has instituted is for our good. Singing His praises is not an optional part of worship (Psalms passim; Eph. 5:19).

One day, of course, there will be a “new normal”. Christ Himself will change all things at His return. The world and all that is in it will be burned up and remade (II Pet. 3:10). We, His people, will be called up to meet Him in the air (I Thess. 4:17), to process with Him into the eternal banquet. Christians need to maintain such an eschatological focus in the midst of what the world around us considers to be an apocalyptic-scale crisis. Neither nuclear war nor climate change nor over-population nor pollution nor pandemic will destroy the world or human life upon it. Such things will never separate us from the love of Christ (Rom. 8:35). We are not to fear those people (or things) who can kill the body but not the soul, but rather to fear the God who can destroy—and preserve—both (Mt. 10:28). On That Day He will judge us for our faithfulness in maintaining or abandoning what He has given us to do. Until He chooses to do so, we must leave the “normal” in His hands.

Thus, we ought to be exceedingly cautious in speaking about a “new nor-mal” in regard to how we conduct worship in the future. Changes in society are not the norm for the conduct of Word and Sacrament ministry, but rather the mandate and institution of Christ to which we are bound at all times to return.

The Virtue and Vice of the Virtual

It has been often remarked that the present lockdown would have been much harder to take only a decade ago, when live-streaming and video-conferencing were the preserve of experts. We can be thankful that from a tiny handheld device a pastor can broadcast his proclamation of God’s Word and invite his flock to join him (though they are unseen) in prayer and praise. We rejoice that faith, which comes from hearing (Rom. 10:17), can be strengthened and preserved in this way.

But to be content with such limited, virtual access to the grace of God is akin to remaining in the age of the Old Testament prophets and demurring with thankless hearts that the coming of Christ in the flesh was wholly unnecessary. “In many and various ways God spoke to His people of old by the prophets, but now in these last days He has spoken to us by His Son” (Heb. 1:1f.). God was not content to leave His people with the distant word of a prophetic mediator. He chose to bridge the gap by coming in the flesh. “And the Word became flesh and dwelt [tabernacled] among us” (Jn 1:14). In that flesh, Jesus did not stand aloof, but entered into the homes of tax collectors and sinners, to the great consternation of the Pharisees (Mt. 9:10f.). They were concerned about contracting impurity or disease from such people. But Jesus came precisely in order to bear our iniquities and illnesses (Isaiah 53).

In the foyer of our seminary, a reproduction of the Isenheim altarpiece by Matthias Grünewald vividly depicts this theology by showing Christ on the cross distorted and pock-marked by the ravages of the plague which was afflicting the patients cared for in the monastery where it had been installed. At the altar He was with them in their suffering. Christ is by no means afraid of meeting with us and wants us to have no fear in meeting with Him: “Let us then with confidence draw near to the throne of grace, that we may receive mercy and find grace to help in time of need” (Heb. 4:16).

God’s desire to enter into our sin-sick lives through the incarnation of Christ is most vividly enacted in the Lord’s Supper. The Sacrament of the Altar is the high point of the Christian Church’s weekly gathering. The preaching of the Word is meant to lead us to the altar, to prepare us for intimate communion with our God, which one day will reach its fulfilment when we sit at the eternal banquet table before His very face. As much as live-streaming can faithfully broadcast the oral Word, it cannot carry out this ultimate function. The Lord's Supper can never be virtual. The Lutheran Reformation fought for the actual Communion of the people in profound preference to the mediaeval spectacle of "virtual Communion" by mere observation. The gifts are given from mouth to ear and from hand to mouth as through the minister Christ once again enters into the midst of "tax collectors and sinners" like us.

No medium is neutral, as men like Marshall McLuhan and Neil Postman have so convincingly demonstrated. For better or worse, screens alter the character of what they present. A medium that is primarily used for entertainment, information, or even manipulation can never be a wholly appropriate vehicle for conveying the holy things of God. Reverence falls victim when the service is delivered to our televisions and computers, when worshippers sit on couches and rightly feel awkward about standing and kneeling, involving their bodies in an event that is so obviously not "real". A one-way medium cannot accommodate the two-way path of worship. Proclamation that is not accompanied by prayer, praise, and thanksgiving is as dysfunctional as a heart that pumps out but fails to draw back the depleted blood. Thus, while it is obvious that the Lord's Supper cannot be received online, there are good theological reasons to be cautious even in trumpeting the value of virtual preaching.

Thus pastors will need to be careful not to judge hastily those parishioners who choose not to participate in virtual worship and instead hold a physical service of the Word at home. Such concerned consciences may well be choosing the better portion. As our churches re-open for public worship, pastors must also be prepared to address the opposite problem of those who will choose to continue to worship "virtually" instead of gathering before the Lord with the faithful—a catastrophe (in part) of our own making.

As we implement safety precautions, we must likewise anticipate the un-intended consequences of such changes. What message will be conveyed to our children (indeed to all our members) if the pastor preaches and presides in a mask and gloves? Do we wish to teach our people that the divine service is dangerous, something to be feared? Do we wish to hide the face and hands of Jesus from those who come to Him in weakness and distress? What a contradiction it would be to deliver the Aaronic benediction through a mask! If Jesus did not hold back from entering the homes of the lowest in society, so too should those who stand in His stead, speaking for Him and giving out His Body and Blood, show His gracious face without fear. There will be long-term repercussions if our churches introduce new practices in response to this disease, as dreadful and deadly as it has indeed been. Masks and physical distancing, whether they are necessary for a time or not, must not become the norm among the family of God gathered in their Father's house.

What Did Our Lord Institute? And What Did He Know?

The Church's practice of the Lord's Supper is normed not by public health directives or individual freedom, but rather by Christ's institution. Note how Paul anchors his instructions to the Corinthian church in faithful delivery of this mandate:

23 For I received from the Lord what I also delivered to you, that the Lord Jesus on the night when he was betrayed took bread, 24 and when he had given thanks, he broke it, and said, "This is my body, which is for you. Do this in remembrance of me." 25 In the same way also he took the cup, after supper, saying, "This cup is the new covenant in my blood. Do this, as often as you drink it, in remembrance of me." (I Cor. 11:23-25 ESV)

The detailed liturgical instructions of the Old Testament remind us that God is perfectly capable (!) of anticipating the contingencies of life among His people. When He wishes, God can provide detailed instructions for every circumstance. And yet, in instituting His Supper, the Lord Jesus did what He did, and bade us do what He did. No qualifications. He unambiguously com-manded the eating of consecrated bread and drinking from the common cup of blessing. The very word "communion" (κοινωνία) means the reception of something in common, both the earthly elements and the divine gifts they contain (I Cor. 10:16f.).

It is tempting in the arrogance of our modern age to think we know so much better than our forefathers. We understand how disease is communicated; we can take pictures of viruses and find them on surfaces. This arrogance is not entirely justified. Even in the Middle Ages people understood that disease was conveyed from person to person and they debated whether or not to hold public services or flee the plague. But in a time of greater faith, they tended to trust the Lord.

The first century, in which Jesus took bread and wine and instituted their common eating in the Sacrament, was also a time of widespread disease. And yet our Lord did what He did. It would be fallacious at numerous levels to assert that Jesus would not have instituted the Sacrament as He did if He had only known what plagues we would be suffering today. This shocking supposition falters on the fact that far worse and more untreatable illnesses ravaged ancient peoples. More importantly, it calls into question both the divinity and the gracious purposes of our Lord. Jesus knew how disease was spread; He foresaw every crisis in human history. And yet He instituted for His Church a common meal with a common cup.

To this common meal Christ attached great promises of the forgiveness of sins, life, and salvation. Life, not death! Like any good father who would not give a snake to his child when he asks for a fish (Mt. 7:10), our heavenly Father does not give us, His children, a meal that will harm us. Luther's oft-repeated words must be heard again:

We must never regard the sacrament as a harmful thing from which we should flee, but as a pure, wholesome, soothing medicine which aids and quickens us in both soul and body. For where the soul is healed, the body has benefited also. Why, then, do we act as if the sacrament were a poison which would kill us if we ate of it? (LC 5:68)

When we receive the Lord's Body into our mouths from the pastor's hand, when we drink from the common chalice, we have nothing to fear.

The life offered in the Sacrament of the Altar is, of course, a heavenly and hidden sort of life. There is no clear Word of Scripture to support the notion that no illness could ever be contracted during the reception of the Sacrament. While the Sacrament itself will not harm those who commune worthily, we may possibly be infected by those with whom we commune. Christians suffer even while doing good (I Pet. 2:20). God's purpose in allowing suffering is not always clear (e.g. Job!). Yet faith accepts that it is better to be faithful to God and receive His gifts as He wishes to give them than to say, "no, I know better" God can work good even in or through suffering (Rom. 8:28). Throughout history, when war and disease threatened God's people, they ran to His house and gifts for shelter and care, not away from them.

The world fears death above all because it knows nothing of eternal life. The Christian knows that physical death is an enemy overcome by Christ's resurrection. Death has lost its sting (I Cor. 15:54-57). There are countless stories of our Lutheran forefathers continuing to provide pastoral services during the plague, in spite of the possibility of becoming infected themselves. And indeed some died with their people. These faithful and courageous ambassadors of Christ teach us that there are some things worth dying for. In the early church, tales are told of bishops who had to prevent Christians from seeking martyrdom, volunteering to enter the colosseum. Still to-day, Christians continue to meet in places where assemblies are illegal (e.g. the Middle East or China), despite the risk of government officials finding and executing them. They count the cost and weigh the risk, but value the spiritual benefit more highly. With Paul they know, "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain" (Phil. 1:21).

A Family, Not a Crowd

Public health advice in the current pandemic recognises that families who live under one roof cannot distance themselves from one another. They share all things, and if one becomes ill it is likely and unavoidable that others will follow. For married couples this is part of the "in sickness and in health" to which they commit themselves. Parents gladly suffer with their children—and would suffer in their place, if it were possible.

When extended families gather, the bubble is expanded. We lay out food on a common table, eating "family style". We may sample something scrumptious from a cousin's plate, or pass a glass of craft beer from brother to brother to taste. There is always some risk of passing germs, but the family bond is more important. Naturally, we behave differently with strangers.

The Bible pictures the Church not as a collection of strangers but as a family, sons of God through incorporation into Christ (Gal. 3:26) and brothers and sisters of one another (Heb. 2:11). This new family relationship transcends or sometimes even replaces our physical family (Mt. 12:46-50). To say that the Church is our family is more than just a sentimental platitude. Our bond with our brothers and sisters in Christ is higher and stronger than blood ties, and will persist into the eternal banquet of heaven after family ties are dissolved.

The Lord's Supper is thus not a restaurant serving strangers but a family meal. Christ presides as pater familias over a table at which His younger brothers and sisters recline. We take holy bread from His hand and drink from the cup He offers without fear or scruples, as we would participate in a family meal in our own home. Adopting this biblical attitude will lead to an entirely different approach to the holy Sacrament than the world would promote.

Is the Science against the Faith?

In offering a few concluding thoughts on medical and scientific matters, we do not intend to trespass onto territory beyond our expertise. But since scientific evidence is often used to call into question the practice of the Lord's Supper as Christ instituted it and the Church has observed it, some comments are necessary.

Firstly, Christians must avoid the danger of "scientism", the idea that only science is able to answer the important questions of human life. Such a view proceeds from a denial of spiritual realities and posits a purely physical explanation for all things. Thus, presuming to be true what it simply asserts (begging the question), scientism fails to be truly scientific. People fall into this trap when they think that medical science alone can tell us how to observe the Lord's Supper in a safe manner, to the exclusion or diminishing of theological reflection on God's Word.

Scientism can appear in various guises. Even apart from this pandemic, it arises, for example, when churches presume to change the instituted elements (substituting grape juice for wine) in response to medical concerns about the physical or psychological dangers of alcohol for some people. Such concerns, while legitimate, represent only one field of knowledge. Pastoral care requires consideration of theological realities, including Christ's institution and what is spiritually healthy. Scientism presumes to speak facts in opposition to faith; Christian theology acknowledges that there are other truths that must be brought to bear.

Secondly, even within the realm of medical science difficult conflicts can arise. As important as the fight against this pandemic is for public health, there is growing concern about other significant health problems that are arising or going untreated. Patients with cancer, for example, have had treatments cancelled or postponed for fear of catching the coronavirus in the hospital. The stress of lockdown has led to a spike in mental illness and even suicide. Treating one disease has come at the expense of others, and the time finally comes when doctors choose to proceed with the more vital care even at risk of patients' catching the virus. In a similar way, the Church has an obligation to offer vital spiritual care to treat the ongoing illness of sin, with its consequent distress and despair, that remains deadly serious even during a pandemic.

Thirdly, it is important to listen to what doctors and scientists are actually saying. For example: scientific experiments have demonstrated that the coronavirus can survive for hours or days on surfaces. In theory the disease can be contracted by touching these surfaces and carrying the virus to the eyes or nose. There is therefore good reason for caution, not touching the face while in public places, etc. But our leaders and the general public regularly ignore the qualification medical scientists put on these warnings: touching surfaces is not the usual way in which the virus is transmitted; the risk is actually quite minimal. The normal way the virus is transmitted is through airborne droplets that are breathed in. The disease cannot be contracted through the skin (even open wounds) or through eating food. These facts are relevant to the practice of the Lord's Supper and indicate that it is (medically speaking) far less risky than extended close personal contact.

Fourthly, then, in the present crisis we must be careful to distinguish between the possible and the probable. Once we defend against the most probable causes of transmission (through physical distancing), the possible causes recede in significance behind countless other risks in life. Thus it is important from a purely human perspective to assess risk in a sensible manner. It is quite impossible to hold public worship with zero risk to physical health. But not to hold worship entails grave dangers of a spiritual nature. The Church must endeavour to minimise risk to physical health; but her primary obligation is to provide such spiritual care.

Thus, what is most important is to approach the dangers and worries of life from the perspective of faith. "If you then, who are evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more will your Father who is in heaven give good things to those who ask Him!" (Mt. 7:11). "Fear not, therefore; you are of more value than many sparrows" (Mt. 10:31). God's perfect love drives out fear (I Jn. 4:18).

The faculty of Concordia Lutheran Theological Seminary, St. Catharines, offer these biblical reflections to encourage confidence in God's goodness and faithfulness to Christ's mandates as the Church reconvenes for public worship.

History of a Hymn

“Jesus, Thy Boundless Love to Me”

Paul Gerhardt

LSB 683 / TLH 349

- 1 Jesus, Thy boundless love to me
    No thought can reach, no tongue
    declare;
    Unite my thankful heart to Thee,
    And reign without a rival there!
    Thine wholly, Thine alone I am;
    Be Thou alone my constant flame.
- 2 O grant that nothing in my soul
    May dwell, but Thy pure love alone;
    Oh, may Thy love possess me whole,
    My joy, my treasure, and my crown!
    All coldness from my heart remove;
    My ev’ry act, word, thought be love.
- 3 This love unwearied I pursue
    And dauntlessly to Thee aspire.
    Oh, may Thy love my hope renew,
    Burn in my soul like heav’ly fire!
    And day and night, be all my care
    To guard this sacred treasure there.
- 4 In suff’ring be Thy love my peace,
    In weakness be Thy love my pow’r;
    And when the storms of life shall cease,
    O Jesus, in that final hour,
    Be Thou my rod and staff and guide,
    And draw me safely to Thy side!

Paul Gerhardt’s great hymn of love to Christ first appeared in Crüger’s Praxis Pietatis Melica, Berlin, 1653, in sixteen stanzas. It is based on a prayer in Arndt’s Paradiesgärtlein. John Wesley translated the entire hymn, changing the meter, and published it in Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1739, a very excellent production.

GERHARDT, Paul (1607-1676). In the Lutheran church at Luebden in Germany there hangs a life-size painting of Paul Gerhardt. Beneath it is the inscription: “Theologus in cribro Satanae versatus” (A divine sifted in Satan’s sieve). That inscription may be said to epitomize the sad life-story of Germany’s great psalmist. Paul Gerhardt was born on March 12, 1607, in Gräfenhaynichen, a village between Halle and Wittenberg. His father was Christian Gerhardt, mayor of the village. He died before Paul reached maturity. During his youth Paul experienced much suffering because of the Thirty Years’ War that was raging. From 1622 to 1627 he attended school at Grimma. On January 2, 1628, he began the study of theology at the University of Wittenberg, where he remained until at least April, 1642, and then went to Berlin, where he became family tutor in the home of Andreas Barthold, an attorney. Here in a Christian atmosphere his gift of song began to develop and bear fruit. Many of Gerhardt’s hymns were published in 1648 in Johann Crüger’s Praxis Pietatis Melica (q.v.). In 1651 Gerhardt was called to Mittenwalde as provost. When he started his duties of his first settled position, Gerhardt was forty-four years old. Four years later he married Anna

Maria Berthold. Their first child, a daughter, died in infancy. The income of the family was sparse. Gerhardt also experienced unpleasantness because of the jealousy of a colleague. In 1657 Gerhardt accepted a call to be third assistant pastor of the Church of St. Nicholas in Berlin. Here he continued to write hymns. Gerhardt was recognized as the most popular preacher in the city. Later he became known also for his philanthropy. At this time there was bitter opposition between the Lutherans and the Calvinists. Since Gerhardt was not as violent as others in condemning the opposition, he gained the respect and esteem of many of the leaders of the Reformed group, including the Duchess Louise. The elector Friedrich Wilhelm the Great, a Calvinist, arranged conferences between the leading men of both parties. But all such attempts failed, and finally the elector issued an edict forbidding ministers to attack each other's doctrine and confession. Later he required all the Lutheran ministers to sign a document compelling them to follow the order of the edict. No Lutheran minister who wished to remain true to his confession could agree to this. Gerhardt believed that signing the document would be to compromise the faith. He was sick at the time, but nevertheless he summoned the Lutheran ministers to his bedside and admonished them to stand firm and not to yield to the demands of the elector. On February 9, 1666, Gerhardt was called before his own consistory and asked to sign the famous document. He was given a week in which to consider the matter, but he immediately said that he would not sign. Gerhardt was then deposed from office and even prohibited from conducting private meetings for worship in his own house.

Gerhardt called this his "Berlin Martyrdom." Just before this unfortunate occurrence he had lost three of his five children, and now a son died, and his wife was seriously ill. Petitions from citizens, laborers, the town council, and even from the wife of the elector led the elector to reinstate Gerhardt on January 9, 1667. But the elector had done this with the understanding that Gerhardt would preach in harmony with the aforementioned edict. Under such a condition Gerhardt refused. In the same year the elector appointed Gerhardt's successor. As he did not take up his work until late in 1668, Gerhardt received the income from the office until then. After that he was supported by charitable members of his congregation. Gerhardt's wife died at Eastertide, 1668. Now only a son, aged six, remained. In May, 1669, Gerhardt was called to the office archdeacon of Lübben. Here he labored for seven years with success until his death. Paul Gerhardt was an excellent pastor and one of the best, if not the best, of the hymn-writers of the Lutheran Church in Germany. He wrote 133 hymns in all. Not even the hymns of Martin Luther are used so generally throughout the Christian world as are those of Gerhardt. More of the beautiful lyrics of this sweet singer have found their way into the English language than the hymns of any other German hymn-writer, and with the passing of years their popularity increases rather than diminishes. In Gerhardt's hymns is found the transition to the modern subjective note in hymnody. He died at Lübben, June 7, 1676.
